

PHEPREN and The Global Health Network invite you to a seminar:

Epidemics Ethics: Setting priorities for COVID-19 vaccine allocation

If and when a safe and effective COVID-19 vaccine becomes available, there will not be enough to vaccinate everyone who wants it. Difficult decisions will have to be made about the allocation of available vaccines both between and within countries. What values should guide vaccine allocation in a world where governments face competing obligations to their own people and to the global community, and in societies where COVID-19 and control measures have such disparate outcomes for different people?
