

Nurse-led co-design methodology for developing community health nursing interventions

The purpose of these workshops is to enhance the research capacity of nurses in Pakistan through a co-design process. This approach focuses on social democracy, equity, identifying and understanding problems, and finding mutually agreed solutions for the benefits of the end-users. The workshop will use the five stages of the design thinking model proposed by the Hasso-Plattner Institute of Design at Stanford to guide the co-design process. By following this co-design process, the attendees will be equipped with research skills and a deep understanding of the problems faced by their communities.
